

Photo credit: Andrew Macdonald

- JUNE 23 -

WORLD
FEMALE
RANGER
DAY

HELP SUPPORT
FEMALE RANGER
TEAMS IN AFRICA

PROJECT REPORT
SEPT 30 2021

£73,036 GDP
TARGET

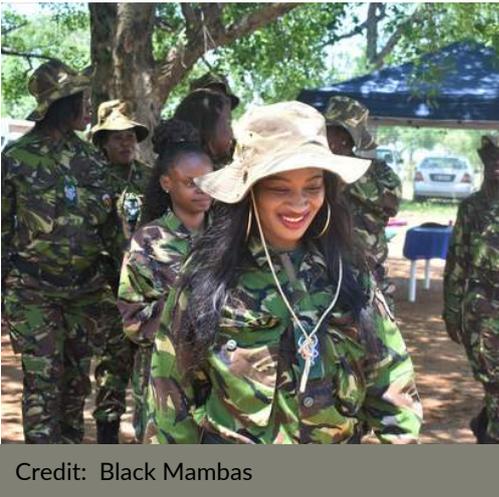

Supporting:

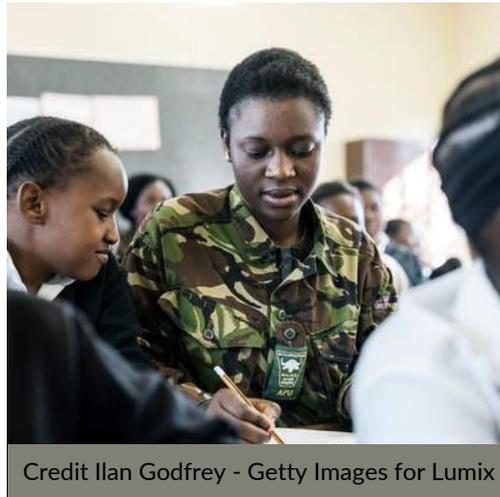

Brought to you by:

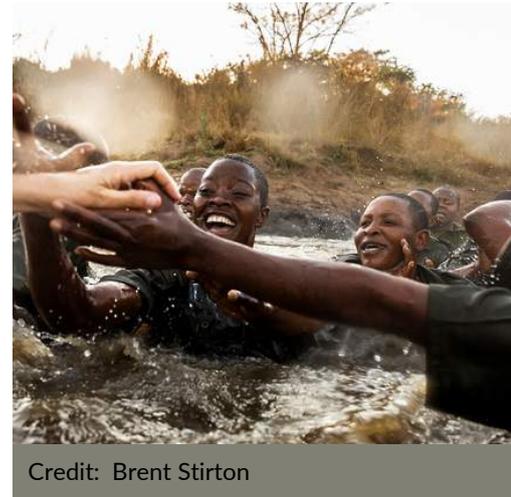

How Many Elephants
UK Registered Charity (1186238)
gulp@howmanyelephants.org
www.howmanyelephants.org

Credit: Black Mambas

Credit Ilan Godfrey - Getty Images for Lumix

Credit: Brent Stirton

HELP SUPPORT FEMALE RANGER TEAMS IN AFRICA

The aim of this ongoing fundraising campaign on GlobalGiving is to raise funds for female ranger teams in Africa, in line with World Female Ranger Day on June 23.

This ground-breaking global awareness day will celebrate and support female anti-poaching rangers, spotlighting Africa in its first year. Female anti-poaching rangers in Africa are bold, changing the game and paving the way for women to stand alongside men at the forefront of conservation, but they need allies.

World Female Ranger Day marks the first time that female wildlife rangers will be recognised collectively on a global platform, to tell their stories, have access to peer support, offer and receive advice, and share knowledge. As champions of wildlife conservation, as role models, as educators and as beacons of hope, these women are not only transforming attitudes towards the role of women in Africa and beyond but are also showing the capabilities and success of females in traditionally male roles.

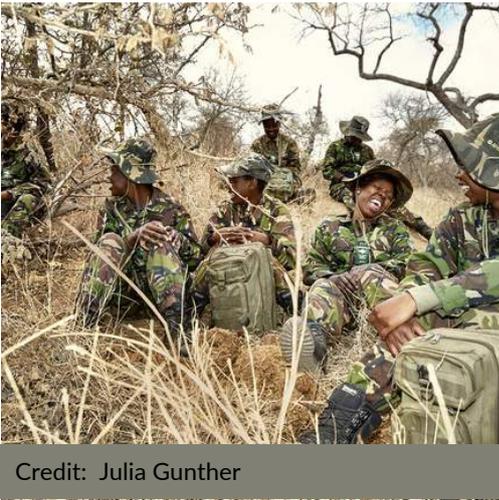

Less than 11% of the global wildlife ranger workforce is female. With women being natural communicators, protectors and investing their earned income in their families, bringing gender equality into the workforce enhances conservation efforts and relationships within communities.

"Having spent time on the front line with multiple all-female anti-poaching units in Africa, it's evident why the female ranger movement is picking up such momentum. These women are proving to be highly successful as they ease local tension and strengthen relationships within their communities. WFRD will celebrate these women but will also highlight the significant gender imbalance in wildlife conservation. Through the WFRD initiative, HME aims to collate gender-specific data about female anti-poaching rangers. This will enable us to identify their needs, find tangible solutions and help build effective policies to contribute towards positive outcomes for female rangers and conservation as a whole."

Holly Budge

Founder of How Many Elephants
Co-founder of World Female Ranger Day

Credit: Julia Gunther

Credit Ilan Godfrey - Getty Images for Lumix

Credit: Holly Budge

Over the last 12 months, COVID-19 has crippled tourism and funding for conservation projects within Africa and globally. The lack of tourists visiting National Parks has led to many rangers losing their jobs or having significant salary cuts. The knock-on effect of this is huge, as one ranger alone may support up to 16 family members. Additionally, reduced vigilance in tourist hotspots has left wildlife even more vulnerable to poaching. The work of rangers is paramount right now.

As recently as March 25 2021, Africa's elephant species have been reported to be at an increased risk of extinction due to being poached for their ivory tusks and losing their natural habitats due to human activity. The forest elephant is now listed as Critically Endangered, and savanna elephants are listed as Endangered in the International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN) Red List of Threatened Species. This further proves the need for the presence of anti-poaching rangers in Africa's wilderness areas.

Many of these inspirational female rangers have overcome adversity, poverty and marginalisation. Becoming a ranger has empowered them and turned them into breadwinners and property owners, and has given them access to higher education and much-needed healthcare. Their often challenging work on the front line, defending wildlife and protecting wild spaces, is making a difference. To shine a light on the impact, The Black Mambas in South Africa are making; since 2013, more than 1500 deadly snares have been dismantled and seized, and record numbers of poachers' camps have been destroyed. The number of snaring and poaching incidents in Balule Nature Reserve, where the Black Mambas operate, has fallen by 76%.

At How Many Elephants, we support the UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) Specifically no.5 - Gender Equality, no.15 - Life on Land and no.17 - Partnerships for the Goals. In keeping with these goals, we hope this Global Giving Campaign and World Female Ranger Day is the start of a long-standing campaign to support female-led conservation efforts across the globe and increase gender diversity in anti-poaching ranger teams. To our loyal supporters, a heartfelt thank you.

Holly Budge

Founder / Chair of How Many Elephants
Co-founder of World Female Ranger Day

Credit: Brent Stinton

Meet Nyaradzo Hoto (Aged 29)

A ranger from the Akashinga Anti-Poaching Unit in Zimbabwe, Nyaradzo was forced to drop out of school and ended up in an abusive marriage. She joined Akashinga in 2017, thanks to her grit and tenacity. She is currently studying Wildlife Ecology and Conservation at the Chinhoyi University of Technology, and her regular income has allowed her to purchase land and build a house. She is a strong role model for women in her community and around the world.

“Women are the face of the future. They are the face of conservation because of their heart.”

Meet Leitah Mkhabela (Aged 28)

A ranger from the Black Mamba Anti-Poaching Unit in South Africa.

“We cannot do it by ourselves. We need more eyes, more people helping us. When I started as a Black Mamba, people were scared of the training we went through. People said this training is for men and we couldn't do it because we are women. The hardest part was that even women were looking down on us. But people started to come around once the impact of the female rangers was clear. It has helped women in the community to see themselves differently. People have seen how we want to do this and so many women started to support us.”

Credit: Black Mambas

Meet Sithabile Munenge (Aged 33)

A Community Scout (Ranger) for National Park Rescue in Zimbabwe, Sithabile used to sell tomatoes on a dusty roadside to make money to feed her children.

“It wasn't enough to look after them. Usually, men are the first preference to be employed by companies. But now I have the respect of my community, and I will be able to build my children's future.”

- JUNE 23 -

WORLD
FEMALE
RANGER
DAY

Photo credit: Brent Stirton

Report designed by Holly Budge

How Many Elephants
UK Registered Charity (1186238)
gulp@howmanyelephants.org
www.howmanyelephants.org